KAYWOODIE BRIAR IS IMPORTED

From the mountains that gird the Mediterranean Sea, from Italy, Greece, Algeria, Calabria, Sicily and Tuscany comes briar of rare and ancient vintage; briar that through the years has proved to be a perfect medium for making the finest in smoking pipes. The Kaywoodie Company accepts only the choicest of these rare briar burls as being suitable for its pipes, and its search for new sources is a never-ending one.

The mountainous countryside of northern Algeria is famous for briar of exceptional quality. One of the original fields discovered in Africa, it continues to provide a major portion of the high quality burls. Picture shows Algerians at work uprooting burls from the ground.

Kaywoodie has its own representatives in the various briar-producing areas. Their job is to select only the choicest briar for shipment to the Kaywoodie plant in America. Many burls are not suitable for Kaywoodies being checked or cracked or lacking the closely interwoven grain that is necessary to make fine pipes.

Only the "Prime Cut" of the Briar Burl is used...

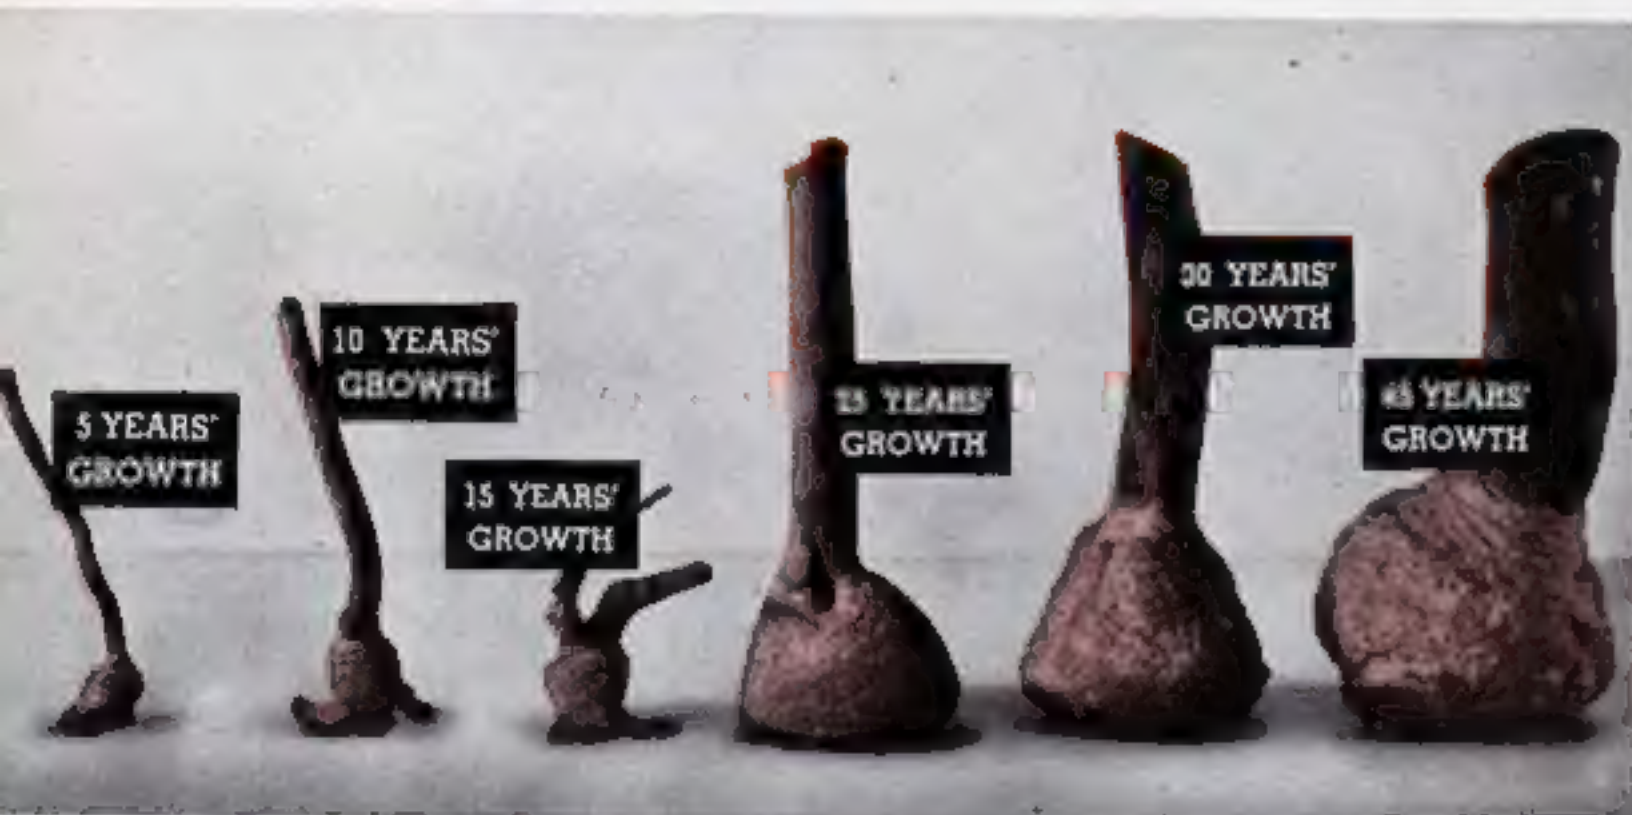

Since the trunk of the briar bush runs through the burl to the roots, a large portion of the burl is immediately lost as a suitable material for making a pipe. But even the remaining portion of the burl has briar that Kaywoodie considers inferior for high quality pipes. By the time the briar has been selected for Kaywoodie Pipes, and the pipes finally cut, over 90% of the original burl has been discarded. Such strict grading is an absolute necessity for Kaywoodie to guarantee the smoker the very best when he buys a pipe bearing our name.

uses only the finest and oldest

Imported Briar

Naturally, the final judgment of a pipe is the quality of smoke it yields, to suit the taste of the smoker. Kaywoodie Briar is not only sturdy and durable, but it is heat-resistant, and it decreases rather than increases the temperature of the smoke. It is selected for these qualities with life-long experience and in accordance with laboratory research.

Kaywoodie Briar is porous. It "bonizes" or "cakes" well. Some briars which are excellent in certain respects, do not perform well in other respects and are unsuitable for cool, sweet smoking. Kaywoodie Briar is seasoned by our own methods developed during 100 years, and treated according to our own processes for sweet smoking enjoyment. Previously the work done by Kaywoodie Company, very little effort was made to improve the quality of pipes.

a typical Kaywoodie Burl...

Due to the length of time required by a burl to grow to full maturity, and since they are consumed faster than they can possibly grow, specimens of great age are rare and costly. The resources of the Kaywoodie Company, the world's largest consumer of briar, are needed to secure a supply sufficient to maintain a high level of quality through the years.

These burls form above the roots of a shrub known as white heath (botanical name: Erica Arborea). The intricate, inter-woven grain makes them totally different from the roots below and limbs above it. This is true briar and it is what all Kaywoodie Pipes are made of.

From Asia Minor—Meerschaum

the only rival of Kaywoodie Briar for sweetness of smoking

These men work with cleavers. They are Turks and do their work at the mines in Asia Minor where most Meerschaum is found. They are cutting away the outside parts of the Meerschaum stones. During millions of years, the outside parts deteriorated due to successive moisture and dryness, and temperature changes. The process of decomposition went so far that only a kernel of sound Meerschaum is left in the middle. The decomposed outer parts are 10 to 20 times as much as the sound kernel which is used.

These men, also in Asia Minor, work with special sharp knives in order to cut away any small imperfections in the Meerschaum stones, not removed by the cleavers. The stones or blocks which are cut into Kaywoodie Pipes are of all sizes and usually of kidney shape, as determined by the work of these cutters.

This is a meerschaum mine. You will notice a white stone in the picture. That is the Meerschaum. It is usually 240 to 250 feet under the surface of the ground, imbedded in red clay. Meerschaum is not clay or mineral, but is organic in origin, being the fossilized remains of minute sea animals, like coral. These little animals died many millions of years ago, and the remains of their shells were compressed by earthquakes and convulsions of the earth, washed over repeatedly by the ocean and by floods which deposited earth and rock on top of them, and were moved and shifted by floods and successive glacial movements. Today the meerschaum is found imbedded in red clay, and it is only in Asia Minor that it is found in sufficient quantity and of quality suitable for commercial use. Meerschaum is very light in weight, and is one of the most porous substances found in Nature. Kaywoodie Meerschaum is impregnated with wax which helps to give it the beautiful velvety finish for which Kaywoodie Meerschaum Pipes are famous, and helps the pipe to color.

BLOCK MEERSCHAUM
$15. to $50. Priced according to size.

Each pipe is deftly cut by hand, like sculpture. Meerschaum Kaywoodies are not mass-produced. Each has its own character, and colors gradually as it is smoked, taking on a rich brown color with the years.

★ When ordering Meerschaum Kaywoodies, state what shape you want:

Many pipes are finished in as few as 50 steps, but it takes

128 separate operations to make a KAYWOODIE

Some Kaywoodies take even more...just a few are shown here

Seasoning and Curing Kaywoodie Briar - Briar from the Mediterranean region is specially cured and seasoned during two years under controlled conditions of temperature and moisture according to our own formulas.

Selecting Briar Blocks for Size - Blocks of briar are of different sizes according to size of burl and direction of grain. Here they are being measured on a gauge and classified according to shape of pipe each will make.

Trimming Block - Here a block of briar is being cut in one of 11 major operations. It is "squared up" for the operation. Kaywoodie pipe-makers fashion each in the correct proportion with experience.

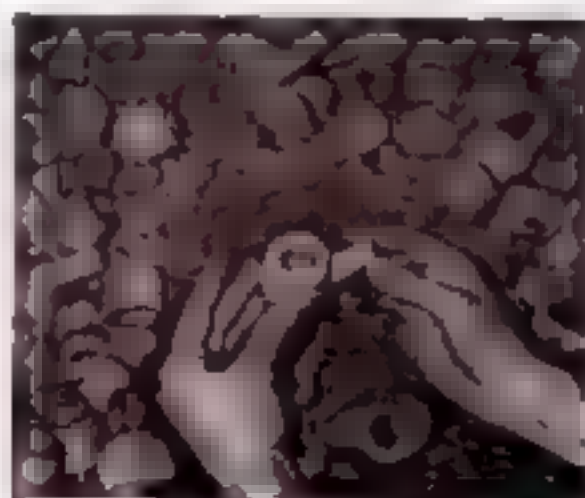

Top of Pipe-Bowl and Tobacco Chamber are Turned at Same Time - Here portion of pipe-bowl is "turned". Block is held in a chuck at 1000 rpm power turned lever cut away the briar inside and is left in one operation.

Sanding - Kaywoodie pipe-maker deftly holds pipe-bowl to sandpaper wheel. One of 24 sandpaper rings given every Kaywoodie. Kaywoodies are finished with surface unsurpassed by any other. A Sandpaperer can ruin a pipe if he is not experienced.

Inspecting and Selecting Pipe-Bowls of Kaywoodie Quality - Mother Nature is responsible for many flaws in briar. Sometimes, forming the briar burl, she builds the fibres around a stone. Six close inspections by operators, aided by Mounting the Mouthpieces - Each pipe is precision fitted with Synchro-Stem. Fourteen operations are required to do this. The briar stem (shank) of each pipe is boxed in a manner to allow proper passage of smoke and diffusion

Polishing and Buffing - High speed wheels used by skilled pipe-maker give final finish. The final polishing is done first on Lanen buffing wheel, next on flannel buffing wheel, and last on slow turning flannel buffer to give extra luster.

STEMBITER KAYWOODIE

for smokers with STRONG TEETH who bite through their pipe bits

Here is a welcome answer for the man whose teeth are strong and who bites right through even the finest rubber bits. Since the Stem biter Kaywoodie conforms to the shape of the teeth, it is next to impossible to bite it off. When the Kaywoodie Company first recognized the need for this pipe, we called in the most qualified help available—the dental profession. After testing many different molds of teeth, and testing various types of mouthpieces, the Stem-biter Bit was made, and as a result a most irritating problem of pipe-smokers has been solved and eliminated.

Stembiter Kaywoodies are made only in the following shapes: 01, 05, 06, 07, 08, 10, 22, 29, 33, 42, 09, 80, 50B, 80B.

Kaywoodie Drinkless PUP—$3.50

Pups hold about two-thirds as much tobacco as a standard size Kaywoodie. Many smokers like to have a Pup shape to match their regular Kaywoodies.

Kaywoodie Drinkless IN-BETWEEN—$3.50

Exact replicas of standard size pipes. Their immediate popularity has proved that many smokers have been waiting for a smaller pipe of standard design.

KAYWOODIE Synchro-Stem & Drinkless Fitment assures you smoking that's clean, cool and dry Synchro Stem—Metal-to-metal contact prevents binding and sticking. It is precision made. One turn removes the mouthpiece for easy cleaning. Metal strengthens the stem to pipe, protects it from breakage.

Drinkless Fitment—For hundreds of years smokers have enjoyed tobacco, but they were forced to accept along with the pleasures the "necessary evil" of the tars that were—and still are—present in all tobacco smoke. The Kaywoodie "drinkless" condensing fitment was developed to keep down the amount of tar in the smoke, to cool the smoke, and to do this without interfering with an easy "draw".

It reduces the tars in the smoke by approximately 50%; it stops moisture like a dam stops a stream; it cools the smoke; and it prevents unburned particles of tobacco, "slugs" contaminated with tar, from reaching the smoker's mouth and throat.

KAYWOODIE MOUTHPIECES

...made for comfort and long wear

All Kaywoodie stems are original in design and hand-tooled to the finest tolerances to guarantee the smoker a comfortable feeling when he places the bit between his teeth.

Every stem is designed to give the maximum in symmetry and balance. Without this, the overall effect would prevent a full appreciation of the individual beauty found in Kaywoodie pipe bowls.

The mouthpieces of Kaywoodie Pipes are "canted" slightly to the left when new. Regular use will shortly bring them into perfect alignment.
